Uwaga: dwa nagłówki zostały podane dodatkowo i nie pasują do żadnej części tekstu.

A. Setting new standards

B. How do seniors follow the latest technology?

C. Digital trends among teenagers

D. Is it a 21st century addiction?

E. Older users of social medias

F. Socializing in real and digital worlds

G. New communication channel between generations

1. Answer: :

Today's grandparents are joining their grandchildren on social media, but the different generations' online habits couldn't be more different. In the UK the over-55s are joining Facebook in increasing numbers, meaning that they will soon be the site's second biggest user group, with 3.5 million users aged 55–64 and 2.9 million over-65s.

2. Answer:

Sheila, aged 59, says, 'I joined to see what my grandchildren are doing, as my daughter posts videos and photos of them. It's a much better way to see what they're doing than waiting for letters and photos in the post. That's how we did it when I was a child, but I think I'm lucky I get to see so much more of their lives than my grandparents did.'

3. Answer:

Ironically, Sheila's grandchildren are less likely to use Facebook themselves. Children under 17 in the UK are leaving the site – only 2.2 million users are under 17 – but they're not going far from their smartphones. Chloe, aged 15, even sleeps with her phone. 'It's my alarm clock so I have to,' she says. 'I look at it before I go to sleep and as soon as I wake up.'

4. Answer:

Unlike her grandmother's generation, Chloe's age group is spending so much time on their phones at home that they are missing out on spending time with their friends in real life. Sheila, on the other hand, has made contact with old friends from school she hasn't heard from in forty years. 'We use Facebook to arrange to meet all over the country,' she says. 'It's changed my social life completely.'

5. Answer:

Teenagers might have their parents to thank for their smartphone and social media addiction as their parents were the early adopters of the smartphone. Peter, 38 and father of two teenagers, reports that he used to be on his phone or laptop constantly. 'I was always connected and I felt like I was always working,' he says. 'How could I tell my kids to get off their phones if I was always in front of a screen myself?' So, in the evenings and at weekends, he takes his SIM card out of his smartphone and puts it into an old-style mobile phone that can only make calls and send text messages. 'I'm not completely cut off from the world in case of emergencies, but the important thing is I'm setting a better example to my kids and spending more quality time with them.'

A few months ago, I had an unusual experience at a large international conference in Berlin. It was my first time attending such a big event, and I was both excited and a little nervous. When I arrived at the conference center, I quickly registered at the front desk and received a name badge with my photo on it. After that, I followed the signs to the main hall. The opening session had already started, so I quietly found a seat at the back of the room. Everything seemed to be going well until I decided to grab a coffee during the break. There were several coffee machines available, but they all required a special token. I realized I hadn't been given one at registration. Thinking it wouldn't be a big deal, I approached the catering staff and politely asked for a token. "I'm sorry," the woman said. "Tokens are only given to participants with full access badges." Confused, I checked my badge again. It turned out that my badge said "Visitor" instead of "Participant." I had no idea what that meant, but apparently, it was a big difference. I explained to the staff member that I had registered like everyone else, but she just shrugged and directed me back to the registration desk. Back at the front desk, the receptionist looked at my badge and said, "Oh, I see the problem. You were accidentally registered as a visitor. That means you don't have access to the conference sessions or meals." "But I already attended the opening session," I said. "And I was allowed to enter without any problems." "Well, that's unusual," she replied. "We'll fix this for you right away." While waiting for my new badge, I noticed a group of people standing near the desk, clearly having a similar issue. One of them, a man in his 50s, looked particularly frustrated. "I've been to conferences all over the world," he said, "and this has never happened to me before." After about twenty minutes, I finally received the correct badge and rushed back to the main hall. Unfortunately, the next session had already started, so I had to wait outside until the break. When it finally came, I headed straight for the coffee machine. This time, the machine accepted my token without any problems.

Looking back, I find the situation almost funny. At the time, though, it was quite stressful. It taught me an important lesson about double-checking everything during registration at large events.

1. The author attended the conference in Berlin because he

- A. was invited to be a guest speaker.
- B. wanted to explore the city of Berlin.
- C. was interested in the event's topic.
- D. wanted to meet catering staff.

- B. it gave him limited access to the conference.
- C. it showed a wrong photograph.
- D. it expired during the event.

Answer:

3. The catering staff refused to give the author a token because

- A. there were no more tokens available.
- B. he didn’t know where to find them.
- C. his badge didn’t qualify him for one.
- D. he didn’t have any money to pay for it.

Answer:

4. The receptionist at the front desk

- A. confirmed that the author had registered as a visitor by mistake.
- B. explained that only speakers could get full access badges.
- C. advised the author to wait outside the hall until the break.
- D. refused to issue a new badge for the author.

Answer:

5. The author learned from his experience that

- A. it’s always good to bring your own coffee to a conference.
- B. large events are better organized in smaller cities.
- C. patience is more important than preparation.
- D. it’s worth checking your details carefully during registration.
