Interviewer: Today, I'm talking to Jessica, who has been a passenger plane pilot for a few years and is now training to become a captain. So, Jessica, how easy is it for women to become airline pilots these days?

Jessica: Well, I've heard a lot of stories that women don't get the same opportunities as men, but I personally never experienced anything like that. Perhaps I was just lucky, but I got my first job immediately after finishing flight school.

Interviewer: So why did you decide to become a pilot?

Jessica: I don't remember exactly when I got the idea, but ever since I was a very young kid, I really enjoyed technical stuff. My dad still reminds me that I liked to see how things, such as electronic gadgets, looked inside. I also loved to play with cars, and watching planes flying in the sky filled me with excitement.
When I was fourteen, I heard about a flight school, thought it sounded really cool, applied, and got in. I had never flown a plane before, so I didn't really know what I was getting myself into. It was just a cool experience, but a big challenge as well. At my flight school there were only ten girls, but most of them studied in engineering classes and only three wanted to become pilots including me.

Interviewer: Now, can you tell our listeners about your first solo flight? What was it like?

Jessica: Sure. My first solo flight was an unforgettable event. I still remember feeling free to go wherever I wanted. But then, towards the end of the flight, something strange happened – I got a sudden headache. I didn't know why, but it appeared out of nowhere. Luckily, it has never happened again.

Interviewer: And what is the greatest challenge for you now, Jessica?

Jessica: You have to spend a lot of time away from home, no matter if you are a male or female pilot. This makes it difficult to maintain strong relationships with your family and friends. You will always be the one who misses get-togethers, holidays, special events and so on. That is the sacrifice pilots make to be able to do this job.

Interviewer: Thank you Jessica. Hopefully, when you become a captain you'll be able to come back and give us an update.

Take a ride in one of our specially constructed vehicles and enjoy a unique London sightseeing experience. During the trip, which lasts about 75 minutes, you will be able to see the city's most famous monuments and buildings. The fun part is that about halfway through, your vehicle will actually drive into the Thames and then sail on the river. You will see London from a completely different perspective! So, trust us, this is a much better option than touring the city on a double-decker bus. Make your booking now!

We all like listening to stories about unusual journeys, don't we? Well, Jean-Jacques Savin, a 72-year-old Frenchman, has recently arrived in London after successfully crossing the Atlantic Ocean in a three-metre long capsule he designed himself. The voyage took him more than four months. The capsule has a bed, a kitchen and a small window at the bottom! Jean-Jacques survived on tinned food and fresh fish. I'm sure you can't wait to hear from the adventurer himself! Welcome to the studio, Jean-Jacques!

Many first-time visitors to Havana wonder how best to get around Cuba's extraordinary capital. You can choose between the buses and two types of taxis. The black taxis are most suitable for journeys to destinations outside Havana. The yellow coconut-shaped ones are best for short trips within the city itself. But, if you're travelling on a budget, the efficient and inexpensive bus system is best.

Hello Mr Brown, this is Jenna Green. I'm really sorry, but I need to be at work early tomorrow, so I won't be able to give you a lift to the airport. Maybe you can take the Heathrow Express train from Paddington station? It's really fast. The trains run every 15 minutes, and you'll get to the airport sooner by train than if we went by car. You won't find a quicker means of transport. Don't worry, you'll make it in time for your flight.

Ladies and gentlemen, when we reach the height of 33,000 feet, the crew will come round to offer you dinner and drinks. The in-flight film will begin shortly after that. The weather conditions are good, we are expecting to land at London's Heathrow Airport half an hour ahead of schedule, at 6:30 a.m. local time. The weather in London should be sunny and warm all day, so that's something to look forward to.

As a wedding planner, I want to warn future brides that when booking flights for their dream honeymoon, they should be careful to avoid a simple mistake that could prevent them from getting on the plane. Brides-to-be frequently book their trips under their new surnames, while their passports still have their maiden names. This means that the couple often need to cancel flights and rebook them at higher prices. If that isn't possible, the couple can't go on their planned holiday at all. So please remember never to change your surnames until after the honeymoon.

An earthquake which started yesterday at 7 a.m. on the Adriatic coast was felt across central Italy and in parts of the Balkans. Houses shook for several seconds and there are reports of minor damage to property but, fortunately, nobody was injured. The local fire brigade said that they were called out to help people who were unsure if they could return home. Schools were closed and trains did not run in the city of Ancona until the evening because of track damage.

Man: There's plenty of space in the house, so it's large enough even for a family like yours. It's got four bedrooms and two bathrooms.
Woman: And what about outside the house?
Man: At the front, there's a beautiful lawn and a two-car garage. At the back, there's a lovely patio area and a large garden, so your children will have plenty of space to play.
Woman: Sounds interesting. And the price?
Man: £450,000, but we could try to get the owner to reduce it a bit, if you make an offer quickly.
Woman: I'll have to talk it over with my husband, but do you think you could also look for something cheaper for us?

Woman: How was your dinner at The Crossing Barnes yesterday?
Man: Quite nice. The restaurant has been redecorated recently. They've replaced those terrible old tables and chairs and bought some new lamps, so the place is much more pleasant now because it's lighter and more comfortable.
Woman: And what about the new menu?
Man: Well, the food, when it finally arrived after forty five minutes, was hot, fresh, well-presented and delicious. But I don't think they employ enough staff, which means that customers don't get their food quickly enough.
